CRITTENDEN SPRINGS.

The Well Known and Popular Watering Place Passes into New Hands.

The Beginning of What Promises To Be The Most Successful Season in Its History.

A visit to Crittenden Springs this week showed that the new manager and new proprietor mean to make the popular watering place more attractive, if possible, than ever. Evaporation of water from the surface of tilied soil during the warm senson isnaily takes the wateraway faster than the clouds supply it. Our crops must depend for their needs more on the supply of metsture stored up in the great res voir beneath than on the rainfall during the main part of the growing season.

SUB SUL 4

TILLAGE BAD AND GOOD. With a good depth of reservoir on soils porons subsoil, and consequently with a free movement of the soil water, down in winter and up in snmmer, and the economical use of soil moisture by the prevention of excessive evaporation, a continuous supply of moisture can be secured to the roots even in a dry season. The upward movement of the soil water hy cupillary action to be free requires compact but porous soil. In freshly stir-red soil the interstices are too large for such action, and here the noward movenent comes to a stop. In expianation of the foregoing is here reproduced a communication from T. Greiner to Country Hentleman, in which he says:

I had a piece of tough sod, clay loam, which was to be planted to onlone and ceps to pick up and help tear the thin potntoes. My man plowed it in hapstyle, as shown in Fig. 1. Owing to continuous spring rains all our soils worked badiy during the early part of the season, and it was impossible to break up and fine them. After much work with disk and smoothing harrow the man got the sur- a tube or canula to field and direct the face of the piece in pretty good shape, but the tough sols were not broken, and hollow spaces were left between subsoii

When the ling from the point and the part grasped plowing is done, as shown in Fig. 3, and by the fingers projecting from the square the soil compacted so that the surface top or buit, by which the tube is held. soil rests closely and firmly upon the sub-soil, the soil water movement is not inter-Mr. Cushman criticises the Chinese soil, the soil water movement is not interrupted. The nesistare comes up into the | tools in some particulars. He blacks the surface soil, as shown in Fig. 4, and pro forceps have too much curve at the vides a continuous supply for the roots point. The jaws should be thin and nar-

The fine loose soil over the compacted hyer acts as a mulch. The cover in the cool and moist surroundings as found on the line between the compacted layer and the pulverized soil must. The sliding ring is used to increase e be very slow.

POTATO PLANT UNDER GOOD CULTIVATION But little evaporation takes place from the pniverized soil for the simple reason that the capillary action is interrupted and the soil water does not reach beyond the compacted part below the two or three inches of mellow soil on top. Thus the supply in the soil reservoirs is drawn on more moderately and will last much longer. All this is made plain in Fig. 5 which represents a potato plant under good cuitivation. The pulverized top soil is the mulch that prevents the excessive loss of soil moisture by evaporation. The little that does escape is quickly replaced from the reserves from

Bees and Fruit. At the recent meeting of California beekeepers the much vexed question of bees and fruit came up for discussion. The ground was taken that bees will not puncture frult, but will eleant up thoroughly when it is previously punctured by birds or wasps. The question of hives was also considered, and preference was for a large hive for extracted honey, while a hive with a small broad chamber was desired for comb houey,

Orchard Grass For Pasture. Owing to its habit of starting anewas soon as out down, almost without regard to weather or season of the year, if the ground is not frozen, orchard grass makes an excellent pasture when thickiy seeded, giving feed both early and late in the season. It will bear continuous feeding better than almost anything but blue grass, but it has one fauit. If not cutor fed down, the last late fall growth, when heavy, is liable to full down upon the crown of the roots and smother itself out. Those who have it should look out that there is not much left standing on the field when winter comes in. It is also easily snothered by weeds when it first comes up, and if they are pleuty they should be mown down until the grass ERS, HAY RAKES, HAY TED-

According to a report from the comnisslover of industrial statistics for Rhode Island, there are in that state 277 abandoned farms. Upon the majority of these, it is said, even the grass is not cut. In the localities of these deserted farms it appears that there is a regular drain upon them for mill help, which has been in good demand. Then, too, many of the farms are remote from rail-roads and good markets.

CAPONIZING TOOLS.

The Old Chinese Instruments Versus the Various Modern Ones.

There are a number of different paterns of caponizing tools on the market. Instrument makers and others have eudeavored to improve upon the old Chinese instruments. Samuel Cushman, poultry manager of the Rhode Island experiment station, who has made an extensive study of caponizing instru: ments of every description as well as practical tests, gives the preference to the best Chinese tools.

A set of these consists of a kulfe or scalpel for making the inclsion, a whale-tone with hooks at each end to stretch the ribs apart or held the wound open, a hook to tear the thin, filulike mem-
